P. H. MORRISSEY DIES IN ILLINOIS

Former Head of Trainmen Expresses When Serving Big Railroad.

GALESDALE, Ill., Nov. 28.—Patrick Henry Morrissey, assistant to the vice-president of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad and former head of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, died in his home here today after a long illness. He was 64 years old.

Morrissey was one of the commission who settled the great railway engineers' dispute in 1915. He was the son of a section foreman on the Chicago and Alton. He went through high school and then became a brakeman and later a freight conductor. He became active immediately in the local brotherhood. Four years later he was elected first vice-grand master of the brotherhood, and he gave up his railroad work to devote all his time to the brotherhood's affairs. In 1906 he was elected grand master of the brotherhood, and he held that position for four years, when he gave it up to become an assistant to the vice-president of the Burlington.

In 1908 he was elected secretary of the American Railroad Employees and Unionists Association, and a few years later was elected its president.

Group bargaining between the railroad men and the railroad companies was the subject of a long and bitter struggle. Morrissey was one of the men who led the railroad men in this struggle. He was a local union in Chicago, Conn., and he was a member of the local union in the railroad. He was a man of great energy and determination. He was a man who was not afraid to stand up for his principles. He was a man who was not afraid to take on the railroad companies. He was a man who was not afraid to take on the railroad companies.

When 27,500 engineers were on the verge of a strike in 1913 they appointed Morrissey as their representative before the railroad companies. Morrissey did not sign a board's report, submitting a dissenting opinion that it was only a compromise. How right he was can be seen by every one now, less than four years later, when another settlement is under attack in the courts.
